PL100 Emerging Markets Infrastructure Development

Shanghai, China.

Looking for a way to gain investment exposure to international infrastructure companies who are operating in emerging markets?

The push is on to build infrastructure within the developing world.

The gross domestic product (GDP) per head of emerging market economies as a group has been growing at more than double the rate of developed economies in recent years. By 2040, the 10 biggest economies in the world measured by GDP may have changed significantly to include India, Mexico and Russia, in addition to China and Brazil which are currently placed as the 4th and 10th (respectively) biggest economies in the world.¹

Infrastructure – a world of emerging opportunities.

Infrastructure is a structural element of every economy allowing for the production of goods and services. For example, telecoms facilitate communication; roads facilitate the transport of raw materials and finished products and airports facilitate timely delivery of goods and services. Participants in the infrastructure industry provide basic facilities, services, and installations needed for the functioning of a community or society, such as transportation and communications systems, water and power lines, and institutions including schools, post offices, and hospitals. Lack of such infrastructure can be an impediment to social and economic development.

Among the potential beneficiaries of an increase in infrastructure spending in emerging markets are the global companies that are involved in the infrastructure industry and operate in emerging markets.

Whether it's a high profile railway development in China or the reconstruction of Beijing in advance of the 2008 Olympics; the need to improve India's road and rail network or the programme of power infrastructure expansion focussed on new power plant construction in Brazil and Mexico, there are long term opportunities for companies that provide infrastructure to emerging markets.

Due to their involvement in the infrastructure industry, and with operations in emerging markets, the companies to which PL100 - EMID will have investment exposure are positioned to take advantage of the opportunities that the infrastructure industry in emerging markets presents.

Which companies could potentially benefit from this infrastructure spending?

Companies that are involved in the infrastructure industry and operate in emerging markets.

What is the PL100 series?

PL100 is a proposed series of listed trusts, each with different investment themes.
